

My Philosophy Leadership

I believe that my core values are a vital part of how I express myself on a daily basis. I promise within the best of my ability, to embody honesty, integrity and fairness in my daily exchanges. I believe that these three form a foundation that builds trust and loyalty within our team.

As a leader, I believe that relationship is everything. I promise to build and nurture healthy relationships through the art of kindness and caring as well as gentle influence. Further, I shall practice deep and focused listening so that I can hear the heart of those I work with. I know that at the deepest level each of them longs to make a difference and my job is to create an environment in which they can do that.

I intend to exude hope, inspiration, and enthusiasm as well as a passion for producing extraordinary results through team engagement and collaboration. I shall inspire people to stretch their boundaries, break through their limiting beliefs, and reach for their highest possibility.

I promise to separate the individual from their behavior. I will honor the person first even though it might be necessary to coach the behavior in order to help them be more successful.

To inspire high-minded thinking, I promise to remain a life long learner. I will continue to read inspiring books and study the art of leadership.

And of all things most valuable I shall always remember my source by taking a few minutes daily to be still. Here I will enter the silent chamber of my heart in love and gratitude and with a prayer for all mankind.
